It goes a bit beyond "fun" when someone takes the conspiracy so seriously. Especially when it involved drawing conclusions from things that have no relation to each other.

Heck, I enjoy a good theory myself, but I know when I'm drawing conclusions that have nothing to do with each other.

That's the only thing that I'm disputing here. Most of Thrash's conclusions are based on circular cause and effect (an example would be inflation) A -> B -> C-> A.

Hollywood creates The Texas Chainsaw Massacre. People enjoy it, and makes the studio money. Because it makes money, Hollywood makes another movie of the same genre. Because it's of the same genre, people enjoy it and make the studio money. Because it makes money... and so on and so forth. It's not some mystical ploy to corrupt the youth of today.

AS I keep saying, its just taking the facts and drawing the wrong conclusions.
