What recall?

There's no recall (the announcement was misinterpreted), good sir.

Nintendo's offering free strap replacements and will replace (actually you're given the choice between sending it back for repair (no loss of data) and receiving a new one) your Wii if it's defective and under warranty (1 month + 90 days if you register it) consoles.

(Oh, and as opposed to what you may have read recently, Nintendo isn't making THAT much money on the Wii, considering that cost estimation were only covering the console itself, not the nunchuck, nor the Wii remote, nor the sensor (given it's not a sensor, but they all call it that) bar, nor the power supply, nor Wii Sports, nor the RCA cable and nor the plastic stands. But yeah, the console is profitable at launch, unlike say, the PS3.)

By the way, overtime the PS3 ends up being the less expensive of the two 'powerhouse' (PC > *).
