Let's say I wanted an FX60. But I could only afford a X2 3800+. There you go, reason enough to overclock. And yes I run a 3800 at 2.6Ghz.

Like I said, "good enough" is nothing but an opinion. I wanted better performance, I always do. My current or former performance might have been good enough for you, but not for me.

If you'd stop being such a pansy(Doitle) and learn to do it right, there would be absolutely no concern for safety.I wonder what you would have blamed your current computer problems on if you'd been overclocking... thank god you didn't in that case.
