and that is one of my main points against pot. What someone does in their own home is none of my business. But if it starts to affect me, then I say it should be removed. Be it smoking, or pot.

It's my belief that the only reason smoking isn't completely banned is because it is far too ingrained in society (aside from the large amount of income it generates for the Government). Had it been banned before that occurred, I don't think there would have been a problem with the thought of smoking being banned.
