Somebody already asked me about that and was proven wrong, by ACK himself who talked about something he only finished it and it was avaiable to the beta testers by some chinese guy @ WS. I love it how you said "douchebag" when actually YOU yourself had no idea what ur talking about and where proven wrong so, douchebag?

Eh, okay douchebag, why don't you shove that pole a bit further up your ass?

I actually have been playing this game since release. Did you know that the flying maps weren't even around (thus, no Orcas) until three or so months after release? No, not even City_Flying nor Walls_Flying existed when Renegade was released.

Also, did you know that Renegade was released February 27, 2002? That's nearly five years ago. I'm 20 now, and have been playing this game since I was 15. You're... 17 now?... and thus, had you actually been playing since release, you would have been 12. I doubt it, especially considering your lack of knowledge of the game's early days.

I also was a beta tester for ACK's revision of Glacier_Flying. Mind you, this beta test was conducted many months after Renegade came out, like I initially said. I found several bugs and sent screenshots to ACK, who fixed them.

And no, Glacier_Flying was certainly not available to the beta testers of Renegade (pre-release). In fact, if I recall correctly, they only had four or five actual maps for their multiplayer tests. Ask Crimson or any other beta tester.

You are right in that a "Chinese guy" from Westwood did the initial modeling work for Glacier_Flying, but he didn't complete any texturing of the map. Once Westwood shut down, however, Aircraftkiller got in contact with the map creator and he managed to get the creator to send him the unfinished map files. There are a few other maps from the former Westwood employee that ACK finished, such as C&C_Snow (I believe), but the only map to be released in an official patch was C&C_Glacier_Flying.

So go fuck yourself, douchebag.

Damn GFG
