I remember the reason that was given before, about allowing him to abuse moderator powers, was that confronting him over it would damage his relationship with Crimson, because they live together.

The thing is, you guys are family so surely you're not going to stop loving each other just because one person asks the other something perfectly reasonable... that being, to stop abusing the power given to them, because it's making the other person look bad also. If that would really cause lasting damage, there's something wrong with the relationship. You seem to find it really hard to ever say no to someone close, Crimson, at least going on my limited knowledge of you on forums and the like. I think you let people take you for a ride and compromise your principles in the process. Why not just say no? If your brother can't deal with that over something as small as not being allowed to do whatever he wants on your game server, you should probably learn that about him. Just my opinion.
