Okay so a player comes in in the last min of a game, gets 100 points by jumping into a APC and doing a engine run at the end of the game. Game lasted 30 min before he showed up so he gets an adjusted score of 3000? While say another player who has been working hard all game has a score of maybe 2000? How is that fair?

Obvosly these numbers are random, but there are flaws in your brothers proposal. Rewarding people full points for a game they only participated in for a short time is not any more correct then the current system, however most of the rest of it, is pretty much alright.
