Romaner wrote on Mon, 12 February 2007 19:34 actually thats not too bad, here in edmonton (the crime capital of canada) its even more lenient than that. in 2 different cases in the last year two school kids were hunted down by a group of teenagers that repeatedly told those two guy that they will kill them, police said they dont believe them. those are 2 different cases with two different gangs. well guess what both of those kids (i call them kids since they were only 16-17 at the time) are now dead. those two gangs killed them in cold blood. the MAXIMUM punishment that was given was only to 1 of those gang members it was a maximum of 4 years in prison. for second degree murder the rest got around 2 years house arrest!! how the fuck can they call it a second degree murder when both of those kids were told they were going to die, then killed! also in the last 6 months there have been over a dozen stabbings all done by underage kids!!! that KNOW they will be out of jail in their mid 20's even if they kill some1 because the justice system is so lenient. i say we need a deterrance NOW!! because the youth nowadays already knows they can get away with whatever they want. actually after seeing the Pickton trial i think they need the capital punishment back. and i for one hope that the conservative government instates minimum sentences for certain crimes, just like they promised before elections. seriously this is fucking insane, just the other day i was at a bar and some guy that looked like he was 16 was starting a fight with me just for no reason. i was going to teach him some manners but decided instead to stay at the bar and not get kicked out for fighting. well this "kid" ended up getting into a fight with somebody else and pulled a knife on him and stabbed that other guy multiple times in the stomach, just to think that i would have ended up the same had i fought him scares me.

i think im gonna go buy a gun now. street justice!!!!

toronto is the crime capital of canada, I should know im doing Canadian Law Studies atm
