Also, you proved my point further because in the previous SS you were logged into the trooprm02 account, but in that SS, which shows all the IP's used to log into that account yours doesnt show? GG.

OK, just drop your conspiracy theories for five seconds and try to see what's right in front of you.

Two instances of a player logging in to your account. The first was when the account was created, May 2006. Obviously you, you haven't denied that part, and the account was created on your e-mail address anyway. Meaning, nobody else could log on to your account because there is no way they could get the password.

The second time was 21st November. That date look a little familiar?

11/21/2006 9:37:48 PM -1 Spoony i just made a clan

Now, not only does this show you logged into that account on 21 November (because if you want to create a clan you must first log in with a warrior account, there is no other possible way to do it), it also shows that the account was originally created by you, because if someone else made it without your knowledge, you wouldn't know the password.

trooprm02 wrote on Mon, 05 March 2007 09:57And the AR thing, so when he did that he automatically renewed my account? So basically anyone on cw.cc can post wins against players that are inactive or have left just because you guys dont prune accounts? Point Proven? I think so

Your warrior account was, and is, still in a valid clan. I've already said to you that if you don't want any games against you to be valid Clanwars.cc matches, there's only one thing you need do: leave your clan on the league system.

Inactive accounts eventually get deleted anyway, but it takes a few months for that to happen. As for inactive, I personally don't remember you ever making a formal declaration to the admins that "I'm leaving, I don't want any games to count on your league" or some such... and no wonder, because simply leaving the +TRPM+ clan on the league system would be quicker anyway and achieve exactly the same thing.
