i didnt vote since i havent read the whole thing. but personally i think that iran must not be let to obtain nukes. i mean what is stopping them from selling those nukes to some terrorist group. i cant see them selling nukes to alquida since alquida is a sunni muslim but iran will prob sell them to hezbollah. and then what?? are you going to stop them then? no its too late then. are you going to trust iran not to do it and to actually develop electrical power from the nuclear enrichment? dont get me wrong iran does have a good argument for it, they are running out of natural resources and nuclear power if handled properly can help their nation very much. however having said that i dont trust them to only strive for the electrical power of the nuclear enrichment, and i dont expect any one else to believe them either. so i see iran being invaded as soon as they are one step away from completing the refinement of the nuclear reaction. but i dont think that its in Bush's plans to invade iran. he really has no motive. he is out of the office right away as it is, since this is his second and last term. so he has no motive to go to another war, unless iran steps up and tells the world they are almost done. and i think the forces are there to intimidate iran to abandon the program since no one knows exactly what the next president is going to do with all those troops there. as far as i have seen north korea might be abandoning their nuclear ambitions as it is. since they are really feeling the sanctions now, and i doubt the north will ever get invaded by US for two main reasons. south korea still has hopes of reuniting the two koreas perhaps after kim Jong (i think his name is) gets assassinated or passes away. and second and most important reason Russia is right beside North korea. and as of right now russia has announced a renewed arms race if US goes through with the construction of the radar in poland and the missile silo in chechoslovakia. just look at it this way, first US builds a radar, then the silo, then they bring their troops right to north korea so very close to russia. Putin wont allow it. thats the end of that. and Syria, well i dont know about it but i dont see it being invaded untill iran is. cause those two will stand together no matter what, since syria wants its land back from israel syria will back iran no matter what.
