

---

Subject: Re: D.A.R.E.

Posted by Romaner on Wed, 18 Apr 2007 21:33:53 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

i see it here on sides of busses all the time. never took it but then again i never went to junior high in north america lol

i did once see a cop on some police show on spike tv pull over this methhead and when he went through her purse he found a DARE certification of completion of the course. and he asked her how she could be a meth addict and still have this and she said it was her son's and then he grilled her for about 30 mins on how her son has accomplished more than she ever could while being like 15! personally i think that the program really would dont have much more impact then aducating kids about the effects and the after effects of drugs. i mean you cant force or brainwash a person not to do drugs simply by making them take the course when they were young. most addicts became addicts while being fully aware of the drugs they were taking. so in the end its still the person's decision to do drugs and nothing will stop them from doing it.

---