This guy can probably explain it all very well.

That was funny. Also notice that you saw the old 500Mhz G4 tower and the 300Mhz iMac G3 bubble pieces of crap. That was a good 5-6 years ago and was most likely running OS 9.x. OS 10.x is alot more stable and uses its resources alot better too. I bet you can't say that about vista.

I got the mac just because it works, it just works. With windows, sure it's easier to upgrade but then you need to install drivers that are out of date and you get viruses on the minute and more problems of the like.

I've had this MacBook running non-stop for about a week now and from the first time when i started it up to today it's running as smoothly as a week ago. The only thing i dislike about the MacBook is physical stuff, like the hinge for the screen doesn't go as far back as you want it. It's made out of metal so when you put your hands on it it's hot to the touch. The trackpad is too big and the button sticks out too much. It's also too sensitive to "tap-clicking". Everything else i just love about it.

About 3-4 days ago i was having regrets about buying this but once you start using them they're just great.

PS. I don't like the smell of them when you open them. It leaves an after taste which isn't nice (i was physically ill after opening and setting up the schools G5 and two Apple Displays).

Anyway, back to the topic at hand.
