Dude, that is BULLSHIT. I know VERY well how to build my own and use my own Windows PC. My work bought me a Mac and I, being a sane and reasonable person, decided to give it a try and I ended up REALLY LIKING IT A LOT. Plus, I am NOT a fucking leftie. I am most certainly NOT NOT NOT a tree hugging liberal, THANKYOUVERYMUCH.

And, I'm sorry if you don't like it, but it does "just work", most of the time. I did experience a hard drive problem once but I was able to recover my files from it and get up and running on a replacement, and yeah, my MacBook Pro gets as hot as Hades because it's one of the earlier model. Oh, and I have two Airport Expresses in my house which I use to stream music from iTunes (on one of 3 computers in the house) to two stereo systems (one in my game room, one in my living room)... and while most days it works just fine, yeah, sometimes I have to unplug/replug the unit in to get it on my wireless network correctly. I certainly get the occasional Firefox crash on Windows AND Mac... oh, and we have a cool Dell color laser printer here at home that I can't print to with my Mac for some reason.

But instead of being an overeager fangirl and treating the different OSes like a religion like pretty much all of you in this thread are, I USE both OSes every single day, for hours, for the tasks which they are best suited. I formed my opinions on the two systems myself without reading what someone else has to say and blindly agreeing with him like a monkey.

So, unless you have actually used a Mac for more than a week, and used the OSX operating system, then you are out of your element and you don't know what the fuck you're talking about. Period.
