...seriously, how long have you been playing this game? How can you not see what an astronomical advantage an orca would be when your opponents can't afford an apache or ramjet for a good five minutes?

StealthEye wrote on Fri, 08 June 2007 07:03 There is no point trying to convince you about the false/bad points you showed.
You could start by actually refuting them...

Crimson wrote I don't think it's unfair. Each team still only has X dollars. If one team is pushing the other team back and prevent harvester dumps, the total finances for the other team will still be significantly reduced, making players significantly less likely or able to donate.
I guess that explains people donating for an orca at the start of flying maps on the N00bstories server before the harvesters are even on the field?

Here's the point: when the enemy has an orca and all you have is basic infantry: you can't kill the harvester, you can't save your own, you can't get boxes, you can't grenade buildings, you can't buggy/APC rush... you pretty much can't do anything except wait until you have an apache and/or ramjets.
