What are the odds that I type in a correct username and password.

And even if it's correct, I've tried and the LOGIN button is still dark and unavailable.

Typing a username and password that way isn't the same as guessing someone else's username. What Jonty meant was that you need to type in a username that you want for your new account and the password that you want for that account (must be 8 characters), then you press login. Pressing login with an account that doesn't exist will automatically create the account and you will be able to play.

Voila!
