Am starting to think people have forgotten history.

Jecht, people need a reason to go to war, they dont go to war because they are "people", they go to war because of a reason and an idea that they held high, like forcing an other mans god on an other like muslims and christians used to do all so very long ago.

I can look back on my English and European history and find many wars over this.

No point in really debating this any further to be honest, we all believe our points to be set in stone and none of us will agree.
