
Subject: Re: New Pentagon footage from hotel
Posted by IronWarrior on Wed, 27 Jun 2007 03:48:27 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Crimson wrote on Tue, 26 June 2007 22:40 I think Blazer has flown in enough planes and been in enough airports to know what a commercial airliner looks like, especially when it passes close enough that had it not been flying at like 400+ mph at the time, he could have told you what the pilot looked like. Of course, you'll have to excuse him that he didn't actually have advance notice of the attack and therefore didn't have his video camera on.

He didnt hear the sound of the plane coming? lol.

There is a airport only about 30 miles from me and I have planes flying over all the time for the fly into landing, even when they are super high in the sky, I can hear them storm over and am talking when they really are that high, that you see them as a small shape in the sky.

So, am guessing, if this plane was so low in the sky, you would get up and have a look outside the window to see right?

As you say, it was so close that he could see people, with it be so low, I would had been up and looking well before the plane was passing me, lol.

AoBfrost wrote on Tue, 26 June 2007 20:58 OOne thing everyone, why do people base their lives on 911? it happened it's over, no one is still searching about it but nuts who think theres a conspiracy, i'm not saying there isnt, but look 911 is over, and even if you do find the truth it wont bring back 2000 people that died.

This is HISTORY, there is nothing wrong with researching into passed events, this is how we learn things.

And if the truth did come out, maybe that would put a stop to the next "911"

I dont fully believe one way or the other of the entire event, but I do think, there is more to 911, then we are being told and because of that, its worth finding out what they not telling us.

To believe one story over the other, without any douths, would be very ignorant.