Agreed.

Quote: the single players thinking their idea is the best

Their ideas may be different than the "team" itself, but they can still participate and use the experiences they had (1 vs 1) along the road.

Quote: the single players thinking their idea is the best, and overall causing the team to do nothing.

If the team disagrees the "idea" then of course, they wouldn't follow it, because they may know more (skills and working together) than that single player, so it would prevent that overall situation.

You can put a team of people who are excellent team players, to a team of mostly 1 vs 1er's and see who wins.

Well, first of all, it involves multi-action. So obviously the team players would win, and plus they have more chance to experience the skills they need to "wipe out" the 1 vs 1er's.

As you can see I quoted all the facts you mentioned.
