My original Nov 19th 2006 Wii was bricked by Paper Mario, One after that drive failed and wouldn't spit out disk's anymore, Next one had some error after I updated it to the latest version and the last one fried out while playing in a thunderstorm. (Had it on a surge protector and everything, even got an adapter to check the ground but it passed all tests)

This new one I haven't even taken out of the box, got so tired of setting them up and taking them down. Its a big song and dance because of my entertainment centers unique setup. The great thing is though Nintendo's customer service is GOLD. They replaced each and everyone with an overnighted wii. Then they send you a pre-paid box to send them your old one via ups ground. All in all cost me nothing but a little effort.

and Thanks Merovingian, added them both
