

---

Subject: Re: The meaning of life?

Posted by Starbuzz on Sat, 11 Aug 2007 18:53:10 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

mrpirate wrote on Sat, 11 August 2007 13:40

doesn't it occur to you that you could be wrong?

And why do you care? So what if he is indeed wrong? So what? He should be allowed to practice his beliefs without criticism no matter how strange it is to you.

How does it possibly affect your life? Is it so annoying to you that you need to disturb his peaceful practices by pointing out that he is wrong..and then causing him needless grief?

If he believes that it will give him peace on Earth and eternal life in Heaven, then so be it. He should be free to practice it without restraint and objections by others.

There are some areas we as a society can correct each other in...but when it comes to religion (especially one where it DOES NOT affect you negatively), let them be.

Why cause more contention and strife by saying that they are wrong? This is the same kind of attitude that starts off needless arguments.

Sure, you can freely use your intellect to reason but you must use that same intellect to first make sure your questioning won't bring needless strife to this already fragile world.

P.S: Sorry for the double post.

---