As I said last night Canadacdn...

1. In the event of a draft within the next year or few, I will be in college, therefore having a legit excuse to NOT be drafted.
2. What that guy said was his opinion, that a draft would be great. The news is exploding all over it like it's gonna happen. It's not, and as luv2pb said, it never will. The only reason this guy thinks it's a good idea is because he's sittin out there with thousands of troops, and he's pissed that congress won't let Bush send any more.
3. The draft, aside from political reasons, will also not happen because of the already large numbers of men AND women enlisted in the military. It's simply not needed. In the event of some emergency, we can just call upon those already enlisted.
When considering political reasons, you'll note that almost all the presidential candidates, Republican and Democrat are for an end to the "war" (if you can call it that), so that by the time the draft gets around, the next president will just shoot it down.

Now I'd also like to bring up points that people already mentioned and further defend them. Do it! That's terrible that they signed up for the military and now they are being CRUELLY FORCED to do what the military does. They just wanted to rob the US government to pay for their education. IMPEACH BUSH.

I like that he brings this up. People against the war say, oh look at our poor boys over there in Iraq, its so terrible that they have to be over there at a young age. But wait, they willingly signed up for the military. What did you think they signed up for? Now I'm sure there's some military personel that don't want to be over there, but know that it's their duty and accept it.

Eh it's late, I forgot what else I was gonna bring up, but I'll say this.

Sure I have plans for the future, college, job, wife n kids, and that's why I'm NOT joining the military. If the draft came around, it would mean there's some large emergency that threatens the safety of the U.S., at which point I'd have enough national pride to go proudly if I was drafted. Yea I had plans, but shit happens and there's nothin I can do about it.
