Britian has 3x as many forces in Afghanistan yet they won't push down into the southern regions to help Canada and the Netherlands. I would judge a country's military strength based on how they function, not just numbers.

NL are fighting the war on "terrorism" too? lol

The ISAF isn't "fighting terrorism." It's a force there to transfer control of the Afghan government away from the Taliban and back to Afghans who actually give a shit about their country and don't just want to sell opium to kids in our countries. The NL are one of the most active contributors.

It's the British and the Americans who are following on Canadian and NL led missions in Afghanistan, not the other way around. And it's us who get shit on by the villagers when we try to make promises because the "more powerful" countries didn't keep the promoises they made 3 years ago when they came.
