The Government doesn't do whatever they want, they do whatever they think will get them voted in again.

Right now a draft would be suicide. People don't feel as if they're at war right now. As soldiers go overseas, life still goes on as per normal on this continent. If you turned off the TVs you'd never know there was a war going on.

Think back to WW2. There were German uboats sinking ships off of the eastern coastline constantly, and you got bombed on the other side of the country. Those weren't things you could fight by increasing security at airports and border crossings. This war is different and to think they would call a draft seems foolish to me, especially with the kind of numbers you guys have over there already.

If it were me in your situation though, pretending that I wasn't already in the CF and Canada called a draft, I would join before they had a chance to enlist me so that I would at least get a trade that I would enjoy.
