
Subject: Re: The draft!

Posted by Kytten9 on Sat, 25 Aug 2007 09:11:00 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

scarabguy wrote on Fri, 24 August 2007 18:43

there are two kinds of wars:

one i call just a war; it goes on but doesn't really affect the country fighting the other is a total war which is when the country puts all its resources in to fighting he war. losing a total war usually means the end of that nation.

a draft is used during a total war, like ww1 or 2. all available men are given guns and told to fight or make the guns. all women are told to get to work too.

A total war is when a draft is used and losing a total war usually means the end of that nation? Then by your definition explain Vietnam?!?!

I have friends serving in Iraq and Afghanistan and they are scared shitless everyday. While I am against the war wholly and in everyway possible I will support my countries troops* and I pray they return home SAFE and SOON.

* this is just an exception insert, unfortunately it seems every army that has been deployed in Iraq has had some accusations of ill treatment, murder, torture or any other form of war crime against them. For the troops over there that act less than honourably I do not and will not support at all, they are just thugs, murderers and bastards with rifles. Incidents of this nature would probably increase if a draft were brought into effect, because any prisoner would be acted against resentfully, like they are the reason that person is here and if they just removed that reason.....well you've seen and heard it in the news I don't have to explain further!

This is just my opinion, you don't have to like it, you don't have to agree with it, but you have to respect that I am entitled to it as you all are to yours. Some of the basic freedoms we fought for in the First and Second World Wars so don't flame me!
