I agree...if you bring in bin Laden and the 19 hijackers, it just does not connect. Well, this mystery plane issue is kinda conspiratorial too.

I'm upset that internet forums exist for the purpose of 9/11 conspiracy theories. That a set of people sign on to those forums and get their jollies, and fun from the deaths of innocent people, is just sad...

It confounds me that people actually believe that the United States Government would actually be able to pull this off.

If you think that I am a 9/11 conspiracy theorist, then you are dearly wrong. I am nowhere close to that bunch of people. Please reread my first post carefully and see what I am asking for.

This is my view on the mystery plane and I said so on the first post:

QuoteIMO, the plane was scrambled into the air to somehow get near the President; maybe it could have landed in the numerous airports nearby and the President could have got in. That's why this plane was built for: for times of emergencies.

But to hear that there is no explanation for the aircraft's presence over the White House is ridiculous. It's not too hard to find out why it was there.

All I asked for clarification was WHY the news media (CNN in this case) labeled this video as "mystery plane" and let their commentator speak in such a idiotic unclear way. Watch the video again and you will see what I am trying to get at...listen to the wordings. The video is narrated in a tone that seems to encourage the conspiracy theorists.

All I wanted to know about this E-4B plane was why doesn't the SS, CIA and others say they don't know what it was doing there. That's bullshit.

As an educated civilian, I have come to the conclusion (from my 1st post) that the plane was merely scrambled to help thePresident. But that's does not mean the idiot media (CNN in this case) have to screw this up with a video that seems to encourage conspiracy theorists.
