Place on the the list does affect traffic from what I've seen. Sure, if you run a crappy server, players won't return, but as long as it's not a really bad server, they'll come back. I think it's more that people don't want to play in empty servers, especially considering the lack of players in this game, so they go to the full ones. What gets them full to begin with is the fact that they're at the top.

About the game, I think the MODs have made it more fun, interesting, and unique, but clearly they aren't for everyone. I'm glad there's diversity and choice though. If you like 'em, go to a server that has them. If not, go elsewhere. I myself have started to like more original play (no starting credits, no base defenses, shells I don't really care for or against) and I've been playing at Jelly alot recently becuae of that (though they do have donate, it's disabled within the first few minutes).
