

---

Subject: Re: Which way is better to communicate?
Posted by Nukelt15 on Mon, 08 Oct 2007 16:45:47 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

Of all of the above, I have to choose snail mail. Any form of vocal communication causes me the same problem; I mean to say one thing and something completely different comes out, then I stumble over my words and wind up awkwardly silent. This is especially true of class presentations and any other form of speaking to multiple people at once. It is easy enough to deal with the written or typed word- my hands (fortunately) do not suffer the same difficulties as my vocal chords do- but of written forms, I consider anything handwritten to be slightly more personal. A hand-written letter may contain much more of a person's actual self, emotions and all, than anything typed is able to.

Thus, snail mail it is, even though I almost never use it.

---