Also, when the kids are young lets use a lot of curse words around them, so they will think nothing of them, therefore not use them. And for dinner every night, lets give our 8 year old kid a shot of whiskey, this will make them not drink so much when they become a teenager.

Quite the closed-minded, aren't we? Just because it's not something you view as logical doesn't mean that it isn't. Seriously, stop acting like a fucktard.

There are other ways of informing your kids and letting them be versed in certain situations instead of having them actually try it. Obviously, letting them physically experience everything isn't the best idea, but for some it wouldn't hurt.

As for your letting a child have a shot of whiskey... maybe not that much, but a small amount would work just fine. There is some scientific research behind this.

Edit: razorblade, read your first paragraph. How did I get the wrong idea? Just like you, I ignored the rest of your post.

Me close-minded? You're the one who thinks you're always right, and if you get opposition you call people names.
