I think the media is largely to blame for giving kids the idea of this. Of course times are changing and teenagers should be safe. 11 years old is far too young and as many people have said, they aren't emotionally ready. As for the people that are believers in waiting until marriage that's fine. Personally I don't believe in that, but I don't believe in fucking left and right. Being in a serious relationship is enough imo. Sex is an important part in most relationships in our society and I don't think it's something you should wait years for. Anyways, everyone is different and will be "ready" at a different age, somewhere between 15-18 would be that age I find. I did when I was 18, I have some friends now that are 20 and still haven't, and all the power to them for waiting for the right person or more.
