

---

Subject: Re: Why the US really wants to go to war with Iran

Posted by Sn1per74\* on Fri, 26 Oct 2007 03:01:56 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

prasp wrote on Thu, 25 October 2007 21:30Quote:Well, that is what they are saying. The real reason is because the US is trying its best to be the world's "International Peace Keepers."

The last tried they tried that, corpses of dead American soldiers were abused in Mogadishu. Believe me, with the new-imperialist president reject (that bought his way into the White House with daddy's money) and his advisors with him, peace is the last thing that is on the government's mind.

What's so imperialist about him? He's a good president. He made a few mistakes, but so does everyone. The economy is booming. The stock market reached an all time high. We're in a war for the right reasons. Saddam needed out. He was murdering his own people. Lemme ask you something. If you had a dictator ruling a country you lived in, and was killing your friends and family, would you want some other country to help you out? Or would you rather let him/her do whatever he/she wants and watch your friends and family die? But because George Bush entered the war, he is being criticized. For what? The war is a success if you look at the statistics. A few thousand people have died. Thats not many at all. 58169 Americans died in the Vietnam war. The Korean war 33000 roughly. Those numbers compared to a few thousand. It seems to me like i's a success. The dictator is out of power and dead. The country is trying its best to start a democracy, and we're waiting there until they do so. The fighting is slowly decreasing. Eventually, we will come out victorious. Until then, we need to support our president, our troops, and our country.

---