

---

Subject: Re: donateC++

Posted by StealthEye on Wed, 31 Oct 2007 10:27:00 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

That is a bad way to learn because of two reasons:

- He won't know what to do when he wants to do something else.
- Someone here should write that code. => Support forums are to help people, not to do their jobs.

Quote:A good C++ book is the best way to learn C++ (Its how I learned C++ all those years ago)I don't agree. I never read a C++ book... At most a few pages. I learned everything I know about programming by downloading open source projects (scripts.dll, CuteNews), and intensively modding them/adding features/etc, until I'm able to build something new myself. If there is something I want to know, then I search for tutorials or other projects that are doing it.

---