Exactly my point...as I posted, the former governor of Arizona, along with 16 "high-ranking" military officials, are having a press conference to talk about the UFO's they have seen, and already, before they have even uttered a word, nobody believes them.

And, as I stated, a UFO could land and thousands of people see it, and a week later nobody would still be talking about it or wondering WTF it was, it would just get swept under the rug.

Which begs the question....exactly how fantastic an event would have to occur, for people to still be talking about it a month later, and demanding to know wtf it was, or the status of the investigation? I seriously think an ID4-type giant UFO could blast the whitehouse down to the ground, and a few months later they would be having a fund-raiser to rebuild the white-house "which was destroyed from the freak lighting storm".

If people refuse to ask questions about what they see, and refuse to be open-minded and disbelieve things before they even hear them, they are nothing more than sheep. It's fine with me if the people want to be sheep, I just want to know who their masters are, and what their plans are.
