Sorry Blazer about this late reply...my internet was down!
So anyway...

When it comes to the subject of UFO's, I think there is just a massive amount of information that people do not know which one is the truth.

Even if it includes military/government officials, people will only draw the "ah the military is always lying" link because the media has made people believe over the years that the military is covering up the UFO subject.

Anyway...I don't think UFO's can't be compared to other unproven things like God, fate, luck. Why? Because humans have a psychological necessity to believe in God. How many humans wake up every morning and pray to their god(s) so that they can have a "blessed" day? It uplifts their spirits and gives them a boost of confidence that someone (even if that someone is nonexistant) is watching over them.

And fate and luck are just two words that describe the randomness of life.

But UFO's are not necessary for humans to live. It is an object of curiosity and thanks to the bull* that can be found about UFO's today in the media that people really don't care whether it's true or not.
