

---

Subject: Re: Your thoughts on death?

Posted by Starbuzz on Mon, 26 Nov 2007 20:15:34 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

Jecht wrote on Mon, 26 November 2007 13:21

There is no evidence to say Christianity can't exist.

Can you prove any of the events that took place in the Bible other than quoting the Bible itself? I see falsehood when I smell it.

Were the writings in the Bible true? Yes, they are because they are inspired by God.

It is no secret that Europe was the birth of modern civilization. But at that time, the stories from the Bible were pushed into the minds of those living in Europe by the Church. And people actually believed that due to the false hopefulness presented in the story. People were mind-controlled and those who opposed were denounced as heretics and cut off.

There was only one Bible per town/church and people would flock to churches to hear the "word of God." Then Guttenberg comes out with his printing machine and aha! Now everyone gets a Bible. People began reading and their faith in it (even if the story is false, it gave them hope) strengthened.

The Bible is a famous book today not because God was preserving it through the ages (as believers entrenched in their faith claim) but because this story was present in the right time in the right place. The invention of the printing press in Germany and the presence of the Bible in Europe magnified the scope of the Bible and thus, the faith spread with the paper. And this was a massive spread of information over such a short time.

Christopher Columbus took the Bible with him to the New World and the European colonists took it with them to North America. We all know what happened afterwards. No wonder the West is known as the cradle of Christian civilization.

It is kind of like evolution...the human evolution of thought and knowledge over the centuries is what should be discussed here...not petty religious views. In the same regard, the Koran spread likewise in the Arab areas.

It's not hard to believe in evolution. The co-called "early man" worshipped anything that inspired and frightened him. Rain, sun, clouds, volcanoes...nature. As human thought and inventions and collaboration raised, these religious views also evolved to where here it is today.

So you see? I don't think the above things are lies but based on pure logic. No magic and supernatural beings involved. And I hate to break it to you but they just might be the truth that religious types vehemently deny.

Jecht wrote on Mon, 26 November 2007 13:21 You see, the difference I've observed between Christianity and Atheism is that we admit when we don't know why something is the way it is, Instead of pretending like we do.

That was probably the biggest lie ever. Christians admitting they don't know? You maybe an exception but most of them talk the talk and preach the falsehood.

And Atheists are always accused of the ones "pretending to know everything" while all it takes is a brain and the commonsense to think outside of the religious box. We are using complete logic and yet you throw us down.

We use accurate records of millions of books of historical records that were written by so many historians and writers that interminingle and prove each other's accounts true. We only don't use the 1 book that says "Fuck you" to rationality.

---