

---

Subject: Re: Japan prefers ps3>wii kthnx
Posted by Stau on Sat, 01 Dec 2007 19:28:05 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

@razorblade001. It wasn't specifically aimed towards you, but i thought i saw a couple who said something similar, and it was because of that general opinion.

@nikki6ixx. Sales of the ps3 is rising and they wont fall like that again. They might not dominate the whole of christmas but next year is the year where some of the playstations "killer titles" comes out. Games such as metal gear solid 4 and killzone 2 will sell consoles (yes everyone says the first was crap and i wasnt fund of it either however it looks like the whole game is different this time around)

In any case going by the percent figures sony has stated that (on black friday where the xbox sold 300.000 and claimed to have outsold the ps3 by 2-1 and the wii sold 350.000) the ps3 has sold up towards 500.000 consoles. The exact figures will be released the 13th december. Until then we only have the percentage increase they mentioned compaired to the amount sold last year.

I also believe that while the wii is "fun" it wont last in the long run. The wii was built for people who dont usually game, these people may buy one or two titles in a year, while the other consoles were specified around the gaming community. That is also why that mario galaxy had such "dissapointing" sales numbers when it came out (atleast in some continents. I havent checked regarding them all.)

I cant predict the future, but i do have my speculations and opinions. In any case... Final Fantasy and Tekken 6 will be win.
(especially tekken 6... damn it looks awesome. People playing it has also stated en masse that its the best figheter ever.)

Oh and one last thing. The Playstation 3 has sold more consoles in its first year than the xbox 360 did. And that is even though, the ps3 has only been out half a year in half of the world. Thats pretty cool.

/Rant like post end.

---