How would you describe a person who, how should I put it...

A person who doesn't hate or discriminate any specific race in particular. They do not believe in any one race being superior, however they DO pay attention to race.

For example, if this person was on a bus and an Asian guy gets on and sits next to him, the person takes a special mental note that the person is Asian.

Or if the person is walking down the street in an urban area late at night and no one around, and they see a Black guy walking towards them and starts to worry about if something is going to happen or not.

Because this type of person isn't discriminating anyone. They are only paying special attention to race.

So how would you describe that?

Or as another example, what is the difference between a taxi cab driver that allows every race in his cab (And specifically advertises that he allows all races in his cab) and a taxi cab driver who doesn't allow Black guys in his cab?
