
Subject: Re: Election '08

Posted by cnc95fan on Sat, 12 Jan 2008 00:46:23 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

MWright967 wrote on Wed, 09 January 2008 20:37GoArmy44 wrote on Wed, 09 January 2008 21:31Quote:cheesesoda wrote on Wed, 09 January 2008 17:58 especially the part where they create inflation by printing off new money. The government is our own worst nightmare when it comes to the economy.

So the sollution is lazie-faire capitalism? Revolutions have been fought and empires toppled over capitalism gone wrong. I don't know how people can still support it at all.

I wouldn't use those examples as laissez-faire economies. The French Monarchy and the British Empire were more like mercantile economies where strong government regulation at the federal level was used to protect the industries of those countries.

The English empire has been the 2nd most successful empire ever created. For one simple reason.

Hitler had it all wrong. He tried to make enemies to conquer the land.

The English actually USED the conquered areas for trading, shipping, factories, etc. Thats why they were able to keep such favor among the conquered for so long.
uhuh and the first was?