

---

Subject: Re: Growing Taller?

Posted by Chimp on Fri, 18 Jan 2008 02:38:45 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

bisen11 wrote on Thu, 17 January 2008 20:23M Wright967 wrote on Thu, 17 January 2008 14:25CarrierII wrote on Thu, 17 January 2008 12:58I'm 6', 6' 1" ish, It's not that fun being this tall.

You know, its funny actually, because most people associate being tall with being strong, and superior...HAH...No...If you think about it, theres really nothing superior about being tall EXCEPT being able to reach high things. A few disadvantages:

- . Makes it harder to get into small areas
- . Makes it harder to gain muscle mass
- . Awkward in social situations
- . Makes sprinting harder
- . Makes it harder to find the right clothes
- . Makes it harder to fit into cars

I could go on and on..Point being, besides reaching high stuff or playing basketball, being large usually has negative connotations.

Don't forget when people want to start a fight they look for the biggest looking person =P .

Thats because they assume that if you take down the "strongest", the rest will fall soon after. Actually though, its kind of funny..Because the best fighters in the world are two things:

1. 5'11"-6'2"
2. Extremely ripped

Why? Arms are long enough for punches, but short enough to keep from easily get a hold of, and around 6 feet gives you the perfect leverage advantage, and perfect muscle-building advantage, two things that big people don't have. Plus, bigger guys are just easier to knock over, and lets be honest, when your on the ground, shoulder-breadth and muscle are all that matters, how tall you are doesn't make a shit of a difference.

In highschool, I got the crap beaten out of me twice by a 5'9" guy and a 6'0". I should know.

(Another reason I hate my height)

---