

---

Subject: Re: Cloning/Murder

Posted by Starbuzz on Tue, 22 Jan 2008 04:53:13 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

Originally Blue wrote on Mon, 21 January 2008 20:10 How does religion make obedience and discipline bad? It's similar, if not the same, as a parent telling a kid to don't scream or a monster will show up.

It replaces the the common law of the land with a "god-given" law to promote divisivness and thus further conflicts and tension.

For example, to a Christian, the world is divided into believers and non-believers. And that those who do not accept Sir Jesus as their "personal Savior" are condemned to Hell. How pathetically selfish!

You call that law? It's nothing more than using fear to keep people in check.

Sure, it is fine with me if you and your kind choose to believe in something like that. It does keep a sort of raw peace (within yourselves) due to it crushing any type of invididual thought and exploration...but it divides humans accordingly.

R315r4z0r wrote on Mon, 21 January 2008 20:32 It doesn't give fear, it temporarily relieves it.

It does both. Gives fear and then also provides a selfish solution. Definitely man-made.

You think Christianity would hold if hell was proven to not exist?

---