

---

Subject: Re: Cloning/Murder

Posted by BlueThen on Wed, 23 Jan 2008 22:07:50 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

Starbuzz wrote on Wed, 23 January 2008 05:42Originally Blue wrote on Tue, 22 January 2008 21:20Starbuzz wrote on Tue, 22 January 2008 19:00

There are Christians who use their religion to control and suppress the thoughts and feelings of others. This amounts to cruelty. There are millions of Christians in the world who believe sickness/diseases is the result of sin. What hypocrisy!

and where did you get this information from? Every member in my family is christian, and not one of them think that disease and sickness is a result of "sin."

Typical defense I exactly expected.

Yes, because if your family is not doing it, then no one is doing it right?

That's the best way to avoid the underlying argument because you ignore what millions of other Christians do after reading the same Bible you have.

I'm symbolizing Christians I know for the general population. Most parts of my family goes to different churches. The people at their churches believe the something they do. So how many is that? A lot, and all the people in those churches probably have families, and so on. It's common sense.

Don't use the "That's a crappy argument" comeback when it just gives irony a whole new definition.

Answer my question. Again, where did you get this information from?

---