
Subject: Re: Should the community have a "say"?
Posted by Blazer on Sun, 27 Jan 2008 09:17:06 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Note that although Crimmy does pay a lot of money for things for the community, I don't think she expects or wants anything in return. Oh I'm sure it would be nice if people donated, and some have in the past, and she was grateful and it was a help.

However, I doubt that she would be interested in "selling out", and basically allowing people to use "bribes" to get what they want. I know this is not what you are talking about, but I'm sure the thought has or will crossed other peoples minds.

Fortunately, Crimmy is pretty open-minded, and if there is anything that the community wants that she can provide without damaging or upsetting the majority, she usually does it, free of charge.

I guess what I'm saying is, the community already does have a say...just speak up. Of course that doesn't mean you can say "hey I want Plecos' as the background for the forums", and have it done, but if you have an idea or suggestion that makes sense and others agree with, I see no reason why it wouldn't be do-able.

I believe in the past there were public polls for moderators as well as the forum rules of conduct.
