The fact that you think man is humbled by the idea that they are alone in the world as far as "supreme beings" go is funny. Religious people, as a whole, are just as humbled. There are plenty of VERY intelligent people that are Christians.

There are the annoying extremists and fundamentalists who make it a point to judge others, but that's not religion as a whole. Again, just because you're rebelling against the fundamentalism that you were brought up into doesn't mean you're any more humbled than religious people as a whole. More humbled than your parents? Possibly, but don't make me laugh by claiming that people are humbled by admitting to the idea that there's no god.

Stop calling me a Christian. It doesn't help your argument to lump me in with fundamentalists. It just shows that you're just throwing out random shit at me after getting pissy with my first paragraph or two.

Edit: Oh, you removed the part where you implied I was a Christian still. Good catch... though I made it obvious.
