One example of someone was a "devout atheist"-turned-chrsitan who is well received in both the literary world and the philosophy world is C.S. Lewis.

I don't find that the person who wrote a piece of shit like chronicles of narnia to be some super intellectual.

Heh, unfortunatly the literary world and the philosophy world disagree with you.

I could really care less what the average and contextually-uneducated person thinks of him. Unless, you mean to tell me you are an English or Philosophy major who has studied his works?

Also, a quick google search shows a number of people who have changed from atheism to religion as an adult. One such person:

i major in nigonomotry

also he was most likely was ignorant enough already that he first became an athiest as a rebellious teen and then while still with the same retarded mind found some charismatic priest who got him to believe in christianity without really proving or saying anything.
