You can't install most computer parts or even open the case without totally voiding the warranty, unless you're cat1 certified, or some bullshit like that.

So the shop owner would have to either do all the building himself and let others watch, or he would have to have some huge ass disclaimer saying do this shit at your own risk. Maybe there is some insurance letting him supervise people, but it is a bit of a risk on his part.

I would like a decent computer parts shop near me. The current ones are very lacking. If they sold components that were totally top of the range and offered impartial advise then I would use them. As long as the price was similar to the best deals on the internet.

Could be cool actually, especially if they held LAN parties for kick-ass games and such.

Infact it sounds pretty awesome, someone open one near me.
