Assassin's Creed doesn't have MP.

HVB is targeted to everyone. There really isn't any kind of age limit, the characters are detailed and fun to play with, etc... Try reading some reviews on it. For a $9.99 game it's really well built and entertaining.

There's no kid games in the sense of Baby Mario, Mario Party, Mario: Night of the Living Dead Because Mario Has Way Too Many Games, etc... The kind of games you'd want to play with kids would be things like Super Stardust HD (classic arcade action), HVB, fl0w, Super Rub a Dub, etc..

Also the PS3 has parental controls on everything, including internet access (which is how I'm typing this, via keyboard attached to USB) games, movies, photos, music... You can limit them to what you want played.

One last thing: The "wii" is $249.99 or higher depending on where you buy it. Basic PS3 is $399. $149 difference nets you a lot more gaming experience than you'll get with a "wii". But truth be told I'll probably get the next kid oriented console that Nintendo makes because it's all they ever make, and my daughter will be old enough to use games by then.
