When we are teenagers we all go through some stages of development, and that includes dressing a particular way, If yours is red flags then I would sit by and let you go through it. Some parents in my day had to put up with skinheads and mohicans in all sorts of colours for kids, I'd consider myself lucky that all you want is to "fly the flag" lol.

As long as you do stay out of trouble and do what you think is the right thing, I've no doubt their worries will be unfounded and see you as a mature young man in no time.

For the record I had a Madonna thing, all beads, crucifixes and strange clothes
