I see no difference between a person and McDonalds donating $1000.

I wonder what would happen if Bill Gates does all his charity work anonymously under the Microsoft name rather than the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation. Should Microsoft then deserve less respect because it is a money-making corporation? I don't think so.

Just because it's a corporation does not necessarily mean there is a lack of humanity. It is the difficulty of seeing the people behind the corporation that create this false illusion that a stand-alone person's donations are better.
