How so?

Yes I believe it's fun to be able to pick whatever you want to wear but school is something you do not pick and have to do.

Here in the Netherlands you are allowed to wear the clothes you prefer. But I believe the British is best, because.

- People can't argue if something looks good on them or not
 - Girls and Boys dont have to spend time to spend on what to wear the next day, it's school anyways.
 - Kids with poor parents, won't have too wear the same clothes over and over again, and thene eventually probably get bullied.
 - Kids get bullied or don't belong to a group because they can't wear "these type" of clothes.
 - Disipline, using one outfit is part of some sort of disipline, see navy, army, ecta. Exactly what kids these days need.
- If its weekend/holiday then there is enough time to wear what you want. You are free to do as you please.

Bullying here isn't like what you see on TV. They don't beat the crap out of you because you wear whitey tities. They'll make fun of you, but won't beat you up. Besides, once you get into high school you're a nerd if you pick on people still.
