

---

Subject: Re: British MPs back creation of human-animal embryos

Posted by Aircraftkiller on Tue, 27 May 2008 03:21:45 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

True, but there's a large difference between the Internet and human-animal hybrids being used for biological research. I don't agree with slippery slopes but I honestly can't see it being anything else. Where does the research stop, and at what point do the vices begin to outweigh the gains?

I don't think any of us are qualified to try and arbitrate that, so I can only hope that our future is determined by those with a middle ground morality rather than either extremes. Pushing forth with research with no regard for the value it removes from human life is just as bad as the other extreme; blocking all scientific advancements that don't agree with the majority.

Thanks btw. I'm upgrading to a 2005 Super Sport asap.

---