

---

Subject: Re: GLOBAL WARMING

Posted by Muad Dib15 on Tue, 24 Jun 2008 21:03:05 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

cheesesoda wrote on Tue, 24 June 2008 13:36 I'm not sure if I would go as far as saying that civilization hasn't had SOME impact on this "climate change", but I'm still convinced that this is just yet another NATURAL climate change that has happened for millenia.

As far as doing something about it, I think we DO need to work towards alternative fuels for the fact that fossil fuels do create a lot of pollution and are high in price. If we can find an abundant, alternative fuel, our air will be cleaner (and this we CAN blame on humanity), and our pockets will be deeper.

I think we, as humans, have a duty to preserve the beauty of our world. I really don't like the concept of breathing in unclean air. Unfortunately, it's been a necessary evil for the longest time, but now progress seems achievable. That's really as far as my environmentalism goes.

I wonder how many people have thought about using water and splitting it to create hydrogen to use as fuel. It's clean, even more powerful than gasoline or diesel, and emits Hydrogen and water as byproducts. Look for a possible hotrod coming your way 2 years from now possibly powered by that.

---